Rotterdam
Kop van Zuid, Netherlands

Transformation

The transformation of the entire area of Kop van Zuid has to do not only with a sort of ecological idea called Build and Plant, but also, and much more, indeed, with using a unique chance to create new lungs of the city by concentrating green surfaces across the Kop van Zuid, and thus improve the climate of all surrounding areas.

Cultural, business, housing, and entertainment parks. With these facilities emerging along the city highway (a big, urbanFish), which actually links in such a way certain districts of common importance, we want to make a new model of the city core's structure.

Landscape

New forms of urban landscape, in which both nature and urban space are equally treated. The concentration of green in the last oasis of free space in the city creates the basis for its future ecological transformation

Public Spaces

We have envisaged a number of INTERACTIVE LINK-UPS between the KvZ and some districts, as well as among districts themselves, as a three-levelled intervention:

1. Small scale - revived streets, shops, and important communications
2. Medium scale - public squares, sport facilities, educational and cultural facilities
3. Large scale - universities, media parks, large sport facilities

Introducing Parks, Gardens and Landscape-Style

...which will tomorrow be the city's new lungs and green

Parks have different usages and architectures, and are an equal manner as the existing matrix (the Built and principle). There are four basic functions and a series of green surfaces:

A) Parks

B) Gardens (independent or closely linked with other neighborhoods) that enrich the microregions

C) Small landscape-styled patches as unique sections

D) Semiprivate or private gardens that improve the
