 > Factory, depot, working-class estate: powerful images of work from > days of yore. But what are the architectures for networked, immaterial > or affective labor like? 'Atypical employment', 'outsourcing' and > 'franchising', teleworking, labour migration - these are the buzzwords > for a changed world of work, directly impacting life concepts, daily > routines and urban modes of use. At the same time, the city itself is > changing, too, with inner cities, for example, becoming tourist > service zones and industrial regions becoming Creative Cities. Urban
