I would be interested to see how much natural light the flats get. Particularly as from the outside the windows appear to come to life again, but I think this particular building will look shoddy and dated too soon. Some of the ideas for the regeneration of this area are brilliant, and I am really looking forward to seeing the area progressing in a 3d program, whereas when built it just looks random and confusing. I think this is a good example of the case where something seems kind of balanced and interesting through the right design, but in reality it is a mess. What is this written on the facades?

BEAUTIFUL FUN on the outside.. it's the quality of living on the inside is what's going to count.
