Mr. Alsop designed the Shanghai International Cruise Terminal in China. He envisioned Barnsley, a British town, as the prototype for his central Bradford project — which he called a “box on legs” — helped define him. (This week Mr. Alsop said he had been reluctant to compete with his own designs.)

Reflecting in recent years on his design of the Sharp Center — one of the most prestigious architectural projects he worked on — Mr. Alsop called it “an inherent playfulness that would go on to become the hallmark of his work.” The building, a contemporary art museum in Paris, was designed by architect Renzo Piano.

Mr. Alsop designed the Peckham Library, in southeast London, in the 1980s. It featured an auditorium over a high-level entrance to the two-level library. An elevated section of the building contained a complex for the local police. “The amount of attention that building has gathered around the world is almost embarrassing,” Mr. Alsop said in 2008. “The library is a multi-use space for the local community.”

Mr. Alsop was born in Northampton, England, to Francis and Brenda (Hight) Alsop. His father was an accountant, and his mother was a homemaker. As a child, he and his sister, Sue Moore-Thompson; and his brother, John.

Mr. Alsop is survived by his wife, Sheila (Bean) Alsop; his sons, Oliver and Piers; his daughter, Nancy Alsop; three grandchildren; his sister, Sue Moore-Thompson; and his brother, John.

Mr. Alsop designed the Shanghai International Cruise Terminal in China. He envisioned Barnsley, a British town, as the prototype for his central Bradford project — which he called a “box on legs” — helped define him. (This week Mr. Alsop said he had been reluctant to compete with his own designs.)

Reflecting in recent years on his design of the Sharp Center — one of the most prestigious architectural projects he worked on — Mr. Alsop called it “an inherent playfulness that would go on to become the hallmark of his work.” The building, a contemporary art museum in Paris, was designed by architect Renzo Piano.

Mr. Alsop designed the Peckham Library, in southeast London, in the 1980s. It featured an auditorium over a high-level entrance to the two-level library. An elevated section of the building contained a complex for the local police. “The amount of attention that building has gathered around the world is almost embarrassing,” Mr. Alsop said in 2008. “The library is a multi-use space for the local community.”

Mr. Alsop was born in Northampton, England, to Francis and Brenda (Hight) Alsop. His father was an accountant, and his mother was a homemaker. As a child, he and his sister, Sue Moore-Thompson; and his brother, John.

Mr. Alsop is survived by his wife, Sheila (Bean) Alsop; his sons, Oliver and Piers; his daughter, Nancy Alsop; three grandchildren; his sister, Sue Moore-Thompson; and his brother, John.