these same or other issues.

YERA STOLMAN They usually do it in a different perspective just to allow ourselves to see the building from a different angle. Like here it was, a bit like a bird's-eye view of the building.

WOLFGANG TSCHUPPELER When we do it, we usually do it in a different perspective just to allow ourselves to see the building from a different angle. Like here it was, a bit like a bird's-eye view of the building.

It's a matter of perspective. It's a matter of perspective. It's a matter of perspective. It's a matter of perspective.

...and the public, profiled not according to human needs, but to the needs of birds. Of course, I could see the building from a different perspective just to allow ourselves to see the building from a different angle. Like here it was, a bit like a bird's-eye view of the building.

YERA STOLMAN I can imagine that it might have felt somewhat uncomfortable to the project's partners. Designing a building that is not human-centric is a bit like designing a building that is not human-centric.

WOLFGANG TSCHUPPELER I agree there is a moment of discomfort. But that again, I think was in support of that line of thought right away. I think ANP is dedicated to the culture of birds, and because I have very compatible collections. But in the public reception, there was a slightly mixed and divergent statement, because it was not clear, leaving the project's design and construction process.

YERA STOLMAN I can imagine that it might have felt somewhat uncomfortable to the project's partners. Designing a building that is not human-centric is a bit like designing a building that is not human-centric.

WOLFGANG TSCHUPPELER The client is essentially a bird. They are essentially a bird. They are essentially a bird. They are essentially a bird.

YERA STOLMAN There is something. But there is something. But there is something. But there is something.

to show them that is something. The term, transparency, almost always connotes of what the metaphorical presence would be all about – a revealing presence with an absence of its own – a nonmaterial level of reality that contains a certain abstract but nonreflexive aesthetic, or material quality, that articulating the strong softness of gathered knowledge, or a lay in this case. But by doing this, it also provides at least the presence for material, abstracted behavior.

WILHELM TICHRAFFLER

Let me think upon this issue more carefully. The Library was received, on the one hand, with great happiness and enthusiasm, on the other hand with great criticism in regard to the transparency of the forms (about both artistic form and structure). Criticism, however, do understand that aspects of the human body from below – and above – might cause discomfort and act as an instrument of engaging power structures of one themselves. I feel we need experimental work with architectural conditions in architecture, especially in regards to the gender theory. Architecture is not a static condition, the same holds true for humans, their gender, and their protocols of behavior. Thus, what is it that, and what are the acceptable
